I think it is important to have some laws but not as many. What we need is more freedom in Australia. We need laws to control people so they don't go murder people etc and not get punished. We would have less people in Australia. I think if we had less rules people wouldn't be as bad because some crazy people feel the need to break them. In my opinion my resolution would be to have less rules to make Australia a better place.

I think today's discussion was good because we talked about laws that I think we should have and some I didn't want. My tables scenario was what if we didn't have to wear seatbelts? And I thought it would be a bad thing because lots of people would die but it would be better for the economy because window people would get more business and less pollution. The main question was what if the world had no laws? I reckon it would be good because I wouldn't have to go to school and I could drive and steal and be rich and it wouldn't have any consequences.

I think we need laws. It is important to have laws because lots of people could die from speeding and stabbings, because you wouldn't go to jail for it. So people would do it. Laws are also important because children need an education for your future. Without laws there would be deaths and you could do anything you wanted. I think we need laws for a safe and nice environment.
